A Trip to Cherokee (2016)

(Title with Marker)

The author wanted to visit an exiting and fun place for his vacations. Acceding to his friend's suggestion, he, along with his friend [they], visited Cherokee. They explored Qualla Bomdary town which was surrounded by beautiful mountains that made it a heavenly place. This town highlighted its history crafts, lifestyle, and its six times a week pageant show. There exited a language barrier but [despite language barriers ,] the natives were very helpful in guiding tourists. The town's shops were filled with traditional weapons of war. The author and his friend [They] met a shopkeeper who told them that during tourism season, cherokees [native] earned their livelihood by trade. Offseason [In], they used other means to earn money. The primary source offseason was 'bingo games' that offered good returns. The tour concluded with a visit to a museum which presented the traditional artifacts of cherokee. It was a memorable experience for the author.

249

Original words: 435   Precis words = 145

Final Draft

(Title with Marker)

(2019)   Liking children vs Controlling them

Benefits of enjoying the company of children are undervalued by the contemporary theorists. [rewrite this sentence] All one needs to do is to develop a liking for children in order to harvest those benefits. Children tend to respond more positively towards people who like them. On the contrary, a strict attitude is not taken well by children. An example exists in teaching profession. Teachers who like children are able to control them better. Challenge here is that [Whole] teachers who are exhausted are unable to like children and therefore, find it challenging to control them. To overcome this problem, teaching children should not be practiced for more than two hours a day to avoid exhaustion. If this happens, teachers can like children and form friendly bonds with them which will also ensure discipline.

original words = 359

[similar issues 7/20]

Précis words = 129