

Effect of Weather on Human Effectiveness

Positive effects of the cold can be observed in Northern European temperate countries. Moderate cold weather acts like an obstacle that compels a man to work hard. If an obstacle is too hard like extreme cold conditions, a man becomes disappointed and his energies get numbed. Contrarily, hot weather conditions are comparable to no obstacle at all and make them less productive. A man works hard in moderate cold weather to keep himself warm and well-fed but a person in tropics does not have to put too much effort for food and shelter. Similarly, human effectiveness also changes with the changing weather conditions. In summer, a person tends to be less productive and in cold weather, he tries to be industrious.

main idea is picked and discussed sentences structure needs improvement

word count is missing and it is essential part of precis need improvement 8/20