

It is a common perception that a country's law and an individual's freedom are opposite to each other. Apparently, it is not wrong. Each law implements some restrictions on ^{the} citizens. The more the number of laws, the more the collective restrictions. The freedom of an individual is suppressed under the weight of excessive restrictions. Contrary to it, if number of laws are less, the circle of individual's freedom is wide.

well done satisfactory
7/10