

Title: The Role of Liking and tact
in educating children

Dealing with children

Children tend to positively respond to advices and to accept restrictions open-heartedly of those who have some kind of liking for them. But there is a condition that the liking for children should be free of an underlying purpose. The best liking is the one which is found in joy in the presence of children. Teachers who possess this quality often need to interfere with children's freedom. However, they are capable to do it without causing mental distress. Notably, it is too ambitious for regular teachers to possess liking for children by default due to tiring company of children. Therefore, non-conventional teachers, people who stay away from children mostly, should teach for maximum two hours a day. Furthermore, children should not be taught in a controlled environment, rather they should be dealt with affection and tact.

Approximate no. of words given in the passage = $18 \times 19 = 342$
No. of words in the precis = 138

10
W

Idea and grammar are ok. Title needs improvement.