Thesis Statement:

"Accountability is the cornerstone of good governance, as it fosters transparency, promotes ethical decision-making, and ensures that leaders are answerable to the public, thereby enhancing trust and the effective management of resources."

Paragraph:

Good governance thrives on accountability, which ensures that decision-makers are answerable for their actions and that resources are used effectively to achieve desired outcomes. Accountability enhances transparency, reducing corruption and misuse of power while building trust between institutions and the public. It encourages leaders to act responsibly, aligning their actions with the needs and expectations of citizens. By instituting clear policies, robust oversight mechanisms, and open channels for feedback, accountability ensures that governance remains ethical, efficient, and responsive to the challenges of society. Ultimately, accountability is the cornerstone of governance that prioritizes the common good.
