

Q.No.2 Write a precis of the following and suggest a suitable title (20)

In the quiet corners of her mind, Sarah battled with a haunting trauma that seemed to linger like a shadow, casting a pall over her days. The event that had sparked this distress had occurred years ago, but its grip on her emotions remained unyielding. It was a car accident, a tragic collision that took away her beloved younger sister, Amy. The memory of that fateful day flooded her mind regularly, causing sleepless nights filled with anguish and grief. Every time she closed her eyes, the images of twisted metal and the sound of screeching brakes replayed in vivid detail, tormenting her relentlessly. As Sarah struggled to come to terms with her trauma, she found herself increasingly envious of others who seemed to be living their lives without such burdens. Friends and acquaintances moving on from their past tragedies, enjoying life's simple pleasures with carefree smiles, only seemed to magnify her own emotional struggles. Envy crept into her heart, like a creeping vine that threatened to choke out any semblance of happiness she might find. Sarah felt isolated, unable to share her pain for fear of burdening others or being judged for her inability to move on. Her envy and trauma were intertwined, feeding off each other in a toxic dance of emotions. While she desperately wished to escape the clutches of these feelings, they seemed insurmountable, a mountain too high to climb. Yet, somewhere in the recesses of her mind, she knew that healing was possible, that it would take time, patience, and perhaps seeking professional help. Slowly, Sarah began to open up to a close friend about her struggles, a trusted confidante who listened with empathy and without judgment. In sharing her pain, she discovered that she was not alone in her battles, and that others had experienced their own traumas and envies. This realization offered a glimmer of hope, a tiny flicker of light in the darkness of her emotions. As she embarked on her journey towards healing, Sarah understood that confronting her trauma and envy head-on was a courageous step forward. It would not be easy, but she was determined to find the strength within herself to mend the wounds of her past and embrace a future that held the promise of hope and renewed happiness.

- QUESTION # 2 -

Precis

"Sarah's Journey Towards Healing"

rephrase this sentence

Part

Sarah was suffering with haunting trauma ~~past~~ whose grip was unmoving -

The car accident had led to the death of her sister, Amy. The regular ^{at} flashes of the incident caused painful insomnic nights as the imagery of incident flashed with closure of eye. Moreover, her emotional struggles were enhanced due to her jealousy with other's carefree life lines.

~~Her ill will comprised her happiness as well.~~ subject verb agreement and the sentence is not justified incomplete in meaning

As she was fearful of judgments, ~~she~~ stopped her from sharing. She was suffering from both envy and trauma, and felt difficult to overcome. However, she was faithful in healing overtime and help of professional. Thus, she slowly opened up to her close friend, who listened without judgment. ~~and with understanding~~

To her surprise, everyone was suffering, that gave her hope of healing, and led towards brave step of confrontation of emotions - Although difficult, but she was resilient and hopeful for future happiness

again sentence conveys incomplete incoherent meaning precis exceeds word limit word count is not written too attend to pointed out mistakes don't use - use proper full stop as it is a grammar mistake in precis paper or English need a lot of improvement over all not satisfactory

5/20