Empathy and social morality needs to be a part of human intelligence. It is necessary for human survival to train one's mind to be emotionally mature and morally sensitive. Historically, it was the responsibility of religious institutions to inculcate social morality but they badly failed. Today, the people in power uphold Machelivian views of power being the ultimate morality and vice versa, which can lead to severe destruction of society. But high hopes are attached to educational institutions to promote and establish ways to adopt empathy, love and care.
