During my vacation last May, I wanted to visit an exotic, less popular place. John suggested Cherokee, Oklahoma, and I agreed. We flew to Cherokee and explored Qualla Boundary, surrounded by mountains. The area offered a glimpse into Cherokee history through its Oconaluftee Indian Village. We saw traditional crafts and historical pageants. Local guides helped us navigate shops with Native American souvenirs. We met George, a native, who shared his story. He explained that Cherokees did not rely only on trade. During off-peak times, the tribe hosts "Bingo Weekend," which attracts people and helps them earn. Our last stop was a museum displaying Cherokee art. Back home, I missed the place and looked forward to my next trip.
