John called up the author, suggesting him a trip to Cherokee. Author and John visited Qualla Boundary, a magnificent mountain scenery. Oconaluftee reproducing tribal crafts and lifestyles of the 18th century. Qualla boundary represents Cherokee's Past. They were unable to find souvenir shops due to their language differences. The author found rubber tomahawks and colorful traditional war bonnets. During trip, they met with George, a middle-aged man who was fluent in English, greeted them and they chatted till lunch time. They got to know from George that there is no one means for livelihood in Cherokee. The super Jackpot and the wild Game special attracted crowds. Through these entertainment events Cherokee's residents fetch great returns. At last, they visited the museum.
