Ancient Greek Oracles and The Art of Divination

The fear of human beings needs a communication with the divine, for this knowledge of wishes of god is essential. In ancient Greece, soothsayers interpreted the nature of these wishes with the help of signs like lightning, thunder, flight of birds, direction of fire, and entrails of the sacrificed animals. But sometimes, god delivered his message to an intermediary in the state of ecstasy. Interpretation of dreams and palmistry was also popular. The oracles were in properly-organized sanctuary and were associated with one of the gods. Apollo being the archetypal soothsayer. The most important oracle was at Delphi, delivered
