other necessities of life. On the contrary,

a little effort is required in tropical areas for obtaining food and shelter. Different seasons of the year ^{in tropical and temperate climates} have varying impacts on the human nature. In summer, we are more relaxed while in cold season (winter) we made more efforts of minds and bodies.

Teacher's Role in Dealing Children

The author point out the modern educationist who are inclined towards the not engaging the children. whereas they should enjoy the company of children. If one has a liking for a children, they will be more responsive without reluctance. If one tries to inculcate in them a social behavior and expected something in the future from them, they will not feel gratitude. One's interest in them should be selfless ^{and instinctive} without ulterior purpose.

It is absolutely impossible for a teachers to preserve instinctive liking for children. They appeared as a proverbial dealer to deal with them. This is not everyone's profession. Moreover, overburdened teachers are unable to maintain liking for the children. They have a interaction for a very less time. With affection and loving nature, any child will accept and an every decision will be right for him. By making strict rules to deal with children, they will not be applical. The rules cannot replace affection and strategy.
