Q.2 Children Must Be Treated By Wise Tactics

The author thinks that modern educational theorists are minded to give more importance to the negative side of not interfering with children than positive of enjoying their company. Liking the children to use them in politics is useless. No child will be grateful to be perceived as a political product. The desirable interest lies in the random pleasure of children's presence. The teachers who have this quality will need to interfere with children's freedom, when necessary, without affecting their mental health. Sadly, with heavy workload, it is impossible for teachers to preserve an intimate liking for children. Moreover, the society of the youth is jarring, especially when strict discipline is avoided. The predetermined rules for child treatment are unnecessary. Almost any decision will be right if the child feels that he is liked. No rules, but wise, are a substitute for affection and tact.

Idea is generally ok.
