

My Best Friend

Offline

1. Introduction

A best friend is someone who offers unconditional love, trust, support, and guides you in every facet of life, as I have found all these qualities in the humble teachings of prophet Muhammad (S.A.W), so he is my best friend.

5. Conclusion

A general question echoes in the imagined and empty hall of the world: What is friendship and its essence? When this question reaches people's ears, every one tries to answer the question on the substructure of their own perspectives. To most of the people, friend, or in other words, a best friend is someone who offers unconditional love, trust, support, and guidance in every facets of life. Now, another thought-provoking question arises: Is friendship solely bound to the presence of living beings? Is a true friend merely someone who shares your company, and walks with you through life's journey? If someone were to ask this question from me, I would say, no. It is not always essential for a best friend to be living, breathing human. Sometimes, our closet friends can be mentors, poets, philosophers, or even prophets — figures who guide, inspire and shapes one's understanding of the world. I still remember that time when I was trapped in a deep, dark pit of difficulties with no way out in sight. It was then a spiritual hand reached out to me, pulling me out as if by a miracle. When I opened ~~closed~~ my eyes, and looked at that hand, I understood that it was not just any ordinary hand, but the hand of a best friend. It was the hand of Muhammad (S.A.W) — the messenger of Allah. After that day I began to truly know Him. After exploring various poets, scholars, philosophers, and religions, I came to realize that indeed, it was Muhammad (S.A.W) who could truly be my best friend. Since then, Muhammad (S.A.W) has been my best friend.
