

HAYAT TAHRIR AL-SHAM (HTS) AGAINST THE BASHAR AL ASSAD'S REGIME:

The dictatorial regime has gripped Syria since ^{for} decades. In order to halt the system and overthrow the dictator, Bashar al Assad, riots broke out in different parts of Syria once again. Initially the rule ~~to Bashar al Assad~~ was passed on to him by his father in 2000. However, in 2011, the people felt repulsiveness towards his government. In order to ^{bring an} end his regime, different groups were formed. Among those groups, one group namely Hayat Tahrir al-Sham, considered as an off-shoot of Al-Qaeda, recently tried to break the government by initiating unrest once again. On the other hand, Bashar al Assad in the past would rely on its allies to help him maintain his influence and position. Lately, the allies are too busy and unfocused towards Syria, as Iran has its eyes on the Palestine and Israel conflict while Russia has is trying to place its boots on the land of Ukraine. Considering this a golden opportunity, the HTS escalated the violence in Aleppo, the large city or the heart of Syria, and Damascus, its capital. In order to contain the rebels, Iran provided troops while Russia reinforced via aerial means. All these events have flared up tensions in the Middle-East, shaping it into a hub of crisis.
