

Poetry is the language of imagination and the passions. It relates to whatever gives immediate pleasure or pain to human mind. It comes home to the bosoms and business of men: for nothing but what comes home to them in the most general and intelligible shape can be a subject of poetry. Poetry is the universal language itself, which the heart holds with nature and he who has contempt for poetry cannot have much respect for himself or for anything else. Wherever there is a sense of beauty, or power, or harmony, as in the motion of the waves of the sea, in the growth of a flower, there is poetry in its birth. If history is a grave study, poetry may be said to be graver, its materials lie deeper, and are spread wider. History treats, for the most part, cumbersome and unwieldy masses of things, the empty cases in which the affairs of the world are packed, under the heads of intrigue or war, in different states, and from century to century but there is no thought or feeling that can have entered into the mind of man which he would be eager to communicate to others, or they would listen to with delight, that is not a fit subject for poetry. It is not a branch of authorship: it is "the stuff of which our life is made". The rest is mere oblivion, a dead letter, for all that is worth remembering in life is the poetry of it. Fear is poetry, hope is poetry, love is poetry, hatred is poetry. Poetry is that fine particle within us that expands, refines, raises our whole being; without which man's life is poor as beasts. In fact, man is a poetical animal. The child is a poet when he first plays hide and seek, or repeats the story of Jack the Giant Killer, the shepherd-boy is a poet when he first crowns his mistress with a garland of flowers; the countryman when he stops to look at the rainbow; the miser when he hugs his gold; the courtier when he builds his hope upon a smile; the vain, the ambitious, the proud, the choleric man, the hero and the coward, the beggar and the king, all live in a world of their own making; and the poet does no more than describe what all others think and act. (Hazlitt)

Questions

- (a) In what sense is poetry the language of the imagination and the passion? (4)
- (b) How is poetry the universal language of the heart? (4)
- (c) What is the difference between history and poetry? (4)
- (d) Explain the phrase: "Man is a poetical animal". (4)
- (e) What are some of the actions which Hazlitt calls poetry and its doer as poet? (4)

2001: Comprehension

a) Poetry is the language of imagination and passion as it is a direct product of all things matters of the human mind, whether painful or pleasurable.

single sentence ans is not correct format

b) Poetry is the heart's universal language as it speaks for the innate emotional connection man has with the world around him.

c) The author sees history as superficial relative to the depth of poetry. Poetry reveals the nature of events while history simply categorizes them.

d) Poetry is Seen to encompass all manner of emotive traits that impact action. Fear, hope, love, and hatred and the resulting action are all poetic in nature.

e) Hazlitt describes a range of emotions and actions as poetry. The child who plays, the boy who loves, the miser's greed, and even a king can be described as poets partaking in poetry.

main idea is picked and discussed over all answers are fine but never ans in a single sentence it is incorrect format rest is fine

need improvement 8/20

answers are a bit short too