4. Conclusion:

During the O-Day war, the women in Poland were given permission to stand by men in every sector. This empowered the Polish government to save its economy, education and territory. Therefore, the equal responsibilities helped the Poland to combat the giant power of the Europe. This ascribes that equality and equal responsibilities among women and men can change the fate of any nation state. Sadly, Pakistani women do not have same responsibilities and chances as men in several sectors. Women have lack of chances to participate in politics, transportation sector and agriculture industry. Moreover, women also have no influence in the business on local and national level. Additionally, women's freedom and chances have been facing sanctions as compare men. Also, technologically women do not have access to internet especially in the rural areas. On the other hand, the critics ascribe that women have equal chances as men in government, medical sector and politics. These all respective claims have no reality in the context of third world country especially Pakistan. Therefore, women have no equal chances in Pakistan as men.
