

Art: A Poetical Imagination

The writer has blamed art for creating uneasiness in our life. Plato sees imagination as something that makes emotions grow whereas Tolstoy sees art as a disease. However, Tolstoy ignores the experience of self-reflection and passion through art. Wordsworth defines it as recalling of memory whereas emotions need no recollection. Shakespeare's plays never presented a beautiful theory yet they were very passionate. These passions do not affect the spectators but are only felt through the eyes of its characters. In this way, Shakespeare's theory of dramatic art coincides with that of <sup>other</sup> prominent artists.

words = 98

2020

Q4. What is privatization?

Ans. Privatization is a process in which defaulting companies and industries that were previously owned by government are sold to private investors. In this way, negative income generation from such companies can be improved and regulated.

This takes the burden off from the governmental institutes that are unable to fund them properly. Thus, private investors step in and bring in investments to rebuild such companies.

Q2. Electronic Mass communication?

Ans. The electronic mass communication refers to interaction of people through electronic devices such as cellular phone, laptops and computers. This implies the establishment of connection between people who maybe poles apart. Yet, they are able to hear each other's voice and look at each other's faces. All of this is made possible through electronic mass communication.

Q1. Define globalization.

Ans. Globalization refers to the process of gradual elimination of economic borders and removal of such barriers to improve international exchange and transnational relations. It aims at making the world a 'global village' and use financial resources to empathetically solve world problems.

(Translation)

The educational system of any nation, <sup>tends to</sup> aligns with the passions of its people that promote national interest; <sup>and</sup> the nation stays on its toes to achieve its goals. Therefore, the educational system of any nation is that institute that nurtures people's minds and takes part in the character building process. This educational system functions in such a manner that can completely transform the future of its people.