

Assignment#1

1) When we survey our lives and efforts we soon observe that almost the whole of our actions and desires are bound up with the existence of other human beings. 2) We notice that whole nature resembles that of the social animals. 3) We eat food that others have produced, wear clothes that others have made, live in houses that others have built.

4) The greater part of our knowledge and beliefs has been passed on to us by other people through the medium of a language which others have created. 5) Without language and mental capacities, we would have been poor indeed comparable to higher animals.

6) We have, therefore, to admit that we owe our principal knowledge over the least to the fact of living in human society. 7) The individual if left alone from birth would remain primitive and beast like in his thoughts and feelings to a degree that we can hardly imagine. 8) The individual is what he is and has the significance that he has, not much in virtue of the individuality, but rather as a member of a great human community, which directs his material and spiritual existence from the cradle to grave.

Precie

TOPIC : Dependence of human beings on each

Lives of human beings are tied with each other. Like social animals, our food, clothes and shelter rely on other people. Our knowledge comes from language created by others, without which we would be animal like. It is not just individuality that shapes humans from birth to death, but the knowledge of human society to which we are in great debt of.