An elder said that there is a mountain across the jungle/forest, where that flower grows whose fragrance brings the light of eyes back. But the mountain is very high and it has numerous rocks, thorny bushes, and huge rocks that block the way. To go to the mountain, many people come and went back. But no body came who could reach to the flower. Perhaps, this is why there is sorrow and difficulty in the world and human is in search of light.

Education: A tool for moral growth

There are three schools of thought on freedom in education. The first one asks for complete freedom, second for complete authority and the third says that freedom should produce good children. The third school of thought is huge as it promotes liberty to ensure freedom. The author disagrees with this school of thought, because it carries an individualistic approach ignoring the significance of knowledge. He argues that humans live in a society that require cooperation. Therefore, only education can be instrumental for the development of an integrated society. Freedom is advocated in its true spirit only by self controlled educators, which are rare to be found. Thus, education should not only be limited to providing opportunities, rather it should be used as a tool for moral growth.

Ordinary people are of the opinion that country's law and individual's freedom are contradictory to each other. Apparently, it does not seem to be wrong. Every law imposes some restrictions on citizens. If numbers of law are more in a country then collective restrictions are many too. More restrictions dominate over individual's freedom. In opposite, less numbers of laws increases freedom circle of citizens.

To discover our hidden faults, it is important to see what our enemies say to us. Our friends often praise us for the sake of our hearts. First our faults does not seem to be faults to them, or else they hold our sake so dear that they hide them with the idea not offending them. Or they oversee them. In opposite to it, our enemy observes us deeply and points out our faults from every corner. Even though, he makes small things big out of animosity but some truth lies in it.

Friends always extend good deeds of friends and enemies extend the faults. Therefore, we should be thankful to our enemy that he informs us about our faults. In this perspective, if we see enemy proves to be better than friend.
