

A visit to Cherokee

The author wanted to have a tour towards a crowd-free place in last vacations. His friend suggested him to visit Oklahoma's state, Cherokee. On reaching there, they visited 'Qualla Boundary', a town covered by mountains just like a paradise. The Oconaluftee village was reproducing the historical culture of Cherokee. The natives helped them to reach monument shops, filled with different traditional items. They were welcomed by a shopkeeper who also told them that trading as well as organizing the "Bingo weekends" including attractive games were good source of income for Cherokees in low-visiting days. At the end, they reached a museum representing the amazing arts of Cherokee. The author liked that tour and decided to visit similar stopping places in future.
