

Organizations: Objectives and Determinants of Success

Aims of an organization should be based on the interests of mankind. Therefore, efforts should be made in order to understand their wants. Organizations come into existence for mutual benefit of people and ^{that} also determines their success. Such righteous acts are physical in nature that help in achieving the objectives. Before industrial revolution, a single body of organization was sufficient; but due to advancement of industries a wider management body is required now. The appropriate choice of objectives determines the output of the whole system and, also, the functional body ^{that} ensures that these objectives are achieved.

(100 words)

Literature and Its Impact on Human Mind

Knowingly or unknowingly, a work of imagination affects humans, analogous to the food that has more to it than taste. The quality of the content one reads varies from person to person. In one's childhood, one is attracted to a particular poet. However, as he grows so does his interest in other poets. This is because ^{a mind} once a simple has matured and one after another, poets start to affect his mind. Then, the person compares the poets for their lackings and qualities. The writer suggests that a person should have a wide reading as it allows various authors to live in his mind simultaneously and impact his personality.