

Life of modern human

The new inventions of men are raising serious concerns on their need in human life. The author is of opinion that scientists have either focused on physical or mental strength of human beings. Nobody has bridged the gap between both studies. This has turned human being into a materialistic civilization. The modern philosophies of Capitalism and Communism has further effected the growth of human civilization. Though modern men is technologically advance, they are culturally backward. In such situations scientific discoveries are seen as an agent of destruction and fear for human. This give rise to the question of purpose of human life on earth which is not undebated fully.

words in passage = 360

no. of lines = 122