good behaviour while the third school reflects the philosophy of Rousseauism ^{that} emphasizes freedom yet demands good morality. The latter idea, however, is utopian to which the author did not agree much as it ignores the positive purpose of education and expects cooperation spontaneously from everyone which is hard to find. To ensure survival in the competitive era, education must equip the children with mental and moral development in addition to solely providing them ^{with the} avenues of growth. To meet these ends demand keeping check on them by the educators as the children cannot acquire them in their individual capacity.
