Introduction

At 26 year old, Rehman already has household responsibilities. He begins his morning with challenges like water shortage, electricity crisis. Then, he goes to the office by facing many hurdles due to well lack of well-structured public transport and broken roads. When he comes back home, he has to start thinking about high amount of bills that he needs to pay. If you ask him about leaving for a better life abroad, his answer is definite YES.

We are living in the era of crisis where Pakistan faces numerous challenges, including security issues, economic instability, and governmental uncertainties. Unfortunately, these problems are converging to create a significant issue: brain drain. High unemployment is a major source of frustration for Pakistan Youth with around 200 universities in the country, many graduates struggle to find jobs in their fields and those who find and secure the job has to face a challenge of low salaries.

Religious extremism in Pakistan is also causing frustration among the youth and forcing them to leave the country. Brain drain in Pakistan is a pressing issue, it needs attention and collective efforts from the government and private sector otherwise it will cause various problems like loss of ideas and ultimately it will hamper the country's growth.
