

World Peace is a choice of Superpowers

1. Introduction

Whether world peace is a choice of superpowers or not is a question widely asked. But the historical events and even the current world politics prove that it is the superpowers who determine peace in the world. Their actions and policies show that they want to end the hegemony of their rivals, place watchdogs in different regions, and supporting other countries which can fulfill their desired policies.

2. World peace is determined by the superpowers

3. Superpowers determine whether a region should be peaceful or not

- (a) The stance of superpowers in WWI and WWII
- (b) Causing unrest in the Middle East
- (c) Afghan Jihad and War on Terror fought for fulfilling a single unit's desire.
- (d) The role of superpowers in Russia-Ukraine conflict
- (e) Their blind support to Israel during Palestinian crisis.

4. Superpowers have always strived for bringing peace

- (a) Different charters between the superpowers during WWI and WWII to bring peace.
- (b) They tried to eliminate terrorists from the Middle East region.

(c) Afghan Jihad and War on Terror were fought to give the dispossessed ones their rights.

(d) Superpowers try to make countries militarily and defensively self-sufficient.

(e) They stood against the Hamas attacks which initiated the crisis.

5- Superpowers have their self interests behind peace struggles

(a) The superpowers wanted to end the hegemony of their rivals through these treaties.

(b) They wanted their watchdogs to operate in Middle East.

(c) Their main aim was to take control over Afghanistan.

(d) They use such countries to mitigate the hegemony of other superpowers.

(e) They showed a blind eye towards the killing of unarmed citizens.

6- Conclusion

The idiom he who has the stick owns the buffalo better describes the world politics. The person who has the stick in power, makes the buffalo do whatever he desires. In terms of world politics, the stick relates to being a superpower and buffalo relates to the world politics. Superpowers control the world politics and according to their desires, it keeps changing. Economy, defence, foreign affairs, education, health human development and so on of a developing country largely depends upon the will of the superpowers. Whether world peace is a choice of superpowers or not is a question widely asked. Historical events and the current world politics prove that it is the superpowers who determine peace in the world. Their actions and policies show that instead of peace, they want to end the hegemony of their rivals, place their watchdogs in different regions, and supporting other countries for their own benefit. One can come to know about this approach of superpowers through roles played by America in WWI and WWII. America through its clever peace policies ended empires in WWI and closed the chapter of superpowers in WWII, and paved its way to become superpower. Secondly, the events in Middle East, which include establishment of Israel on a colonized territory, wars in Syria, Yemen and Iraq, show how superpowers under the banner of peace-bearers fulfill their own desires. Thirdly, the wars fought on the lands of Afghanistan explain how underdeveloped countries face destruction when the rival superpowers declare themselves as peace-makers and try to bring peace. Moreover, the superpowers' move or policy to make developing countries' military and economically strong is designed to use these ^{as a} force to mitigate the hegemony of rival superpowers. In the pursuance of these desires, innocent and unarmed civilians lose their lives. But one may say superpowers always try to bring peace by signing different peace treaties, providing a room for negotiations between rivals, economic assistance and policies for making sure that the dispossessed get their rights. On the contrary, the aforementioned are the tricks used by the superpowers to fulfil their policies of introducing their watchdogs in different regions and mitigating the hegemony of their bitter rivals.