

CSS preli 2018

"Parallel nature of men and climate"

There were useful effects of cold weather manifested in temperate regions. It acts as an obstacle to enhance energy, but if an obstacle is overwhelming, it would numb the energy; however, an obstacle act as an activator of energies. Likewise, a moderate cold weather is better for men as he is actively engaged in his chores and keeps on struggling. In addition to doing things for his survival, he has to procure food for himself as well. On the other hand, men in different regions make too little effort as compared to those in temperate regions. Similarly there are parallel similarities between human nature and climates. In cold weather, men put forth all efforts, mentally and physically, to ensure survival, while in hot weather, it requires little effort.

Origin 337

Preli. 127