

Fall of Dhaka

The twenty four years of forced union between west and east Pakistan was full of misunderstanding, suspicion and betrayal. It was an unequal alliance and cannot be united only through religion. The best way was to unite the both parts through mutual consent approved through constitution. But after the demise of Qaid-e-Azam, Pakistan fell into the hands of self serving leaders which used the state for their own interest and alienated the people of east Pakistan which led to the debacle of Bangladesh in 1971.
