Education: Different belief Systems

Mainly these are three belief systems that portray freedom's impact on education. One prefer complete freedom, and other one imposes rules and regulations, while the third one prefer to give freedom but don't allow its negative use. Although third belief is more prevalent but its unrealistic. It relates progress to free will in learning process. Author disagrees with this belief system as it seems self-oriented. The co-operation upon which human society runs wouldn't come from unrestricted behaviour. If learners are set unbound, they can't practice self-management, which is crucial to success. Education is not personal but a social concern, which should incorporate values with respect to society, not just personal will.
