The Essay

There is a remarkable saying of Oscar Wilde on Brain drain, "The emigrant's loss is the immigrant's gain." During the 19th century, Ireland experienced a significant brain drain due to the Great Famine. Many Irish people emigrated to other countries, such as the United States, in search of better job opportunities and to escape poverty and hardship. That mass migration had a profound impact on Ireland's economy. The term "brain drain" refers to the migration of professionals or skilled labor from developing and underdeveloped countries to the developed countries for the sake of good job opportunities and high living standards. Brain drain is not neither a new issue nor is it a fully settled one. It is a complex and ongoing issue that affects both developed and underdeveloped countries. While developed countries have been able to manage it more effectively, underdeveloped countries still face challenges in addressing it. It is unfortunate that Pakistan is among the countries grappling with this issue. The main causes behind brain drain are socio-economic evils: unemployment, over population, corruption and terrorism.

These causes are not new, but their impact in Pakistan is particularly significant.

It is crucial to address the causes effectively in order to solve the issue of brain drain.

We need to recognize that these problems are not descended from heavens but are actually created by humans. Therefore, it is essential to make serious and honest efforts to tackle this problem and find solutions.

Therefore, the main aim of this essay is to discuss the causes behind brain drain along with consequences. In Pakistan, the main reasons of brain drain are economic crisis, political instability, academic crisis and poor standards of living. These create a drastic effect on economic growth, health care and educational sectors, national development and society.
