~~The impact of imperialism on cultures~~

Evolution of feudal and tribal societies ^{development}

Culture has dual aspects in societies, both internal and external. The external manifestations are a reflection of internal ideological beliefs and are heavily influenced by social structure.

The intricate interplay of cultural and societal issues is most prominent in underdeveloped societies, stemming from both the influence of imperialist and outdated social structures.

divide this sentence into two

Resolving these issues requires a comprehensive analysis of social problems. Some developed countries have embraced advanced feudal cultures, while others remain entrenched in pastoral tribalism.

In societies where social and culture development remained frozen until their independence, the adoption of ancient folk culture has led to a neglect of intellectual thinking. Feudal and tribal elements have evolved to become opposing forces.
