It is generally believed that ordinary people believe that laws of a country and individual freedom oppose each other. Apparently, this notion doesn't seem wrong. Every law imposes some restrictions on the citizens. More laws in a country lead to more restrictions. These restrictions crush individual freedom. In contrast to that, less number of laws broaden the scope of freedom for the citizens.

To find our hidden flaws, it is important to notice what our enemies say about us. Our friends praise us often the way we like <sup>in order to please us</sup>. Either our flaws <sup>do not</sup> don't seem like flaws to them or they hide them because they don't want us to feel bad. Or they ignore our flaws <sup>altogether</sup>. In contrast, our foe analyzes us critically and tries to find every one of our flaws; although, he exaggerates them a bit too much. However, there is some truth in those criticisms. A friend always exaggerates our good deeds while an enemy does the same for our flaws. We should be thankful to our enemies for highlighting our flaws. In this context, a foe proves to be better than a friend.

Every era brings with itself certain circumstances that nobody likes but has to accept nonetheless. Oftentimes, to test us, the nature puts so much in front of us that has nothing to do with us, in fact it doesn't concern us at all. Even then we need to embrace it in our life.

The same is happening now. Every decade has brought new changes that were completely different from the previous ones. Natural knowledge and skills has given ~~some~~ much to the humans that can be dubbed as trash of educational and economic process.

The nature gives us fruit but it also obligates us to dispose off the peels properly. The environment gets polluted if that is not done.

The elderly man told that there is a mountain across the jungle where that flower grows and its fragrance restores eyesight. But the mountain is too steep, has numerous boulders, shrubs full of thorns and large stones that block the path. Several people came to to trek that mountain but none of them succeeded to reach the flower. Perhaps this the reason why there is so much sorrow and pain in this world and man is in continuous search of light.
