

Superstitions are often illogical. They can occasionally serve as entertainment. However, only an ignorant person would believe in such things. A scientist may ask one to support his/her claims, whereas a superstitious person may need a variety of evidence to support his/her claims. ~~Just~~ Just a few similar events won't be enough to convince anyone to a particular belief. Small brains would only be persuaded.

✓

Title: Superstitions and science