It is in the temperate countries of northern Europe that the beneficial effects of cold are most manifest. A cold climate seems to stimulate energy by acting as an obstacle. In the face of an insuperable obstacle our energies are numbed by despair; the total absence of obstacles, on the other hand leaves no room for the exercise and training of energy; but a struggle against difficulties that we have a fair hope of over-coming, calls into active operation all our powers. In like manner, while intense cold numbs human energies, and a hot climate affords little motive for exertion, moderate cold seems to have a bracing effect on the human race. In a moderately cold climate man is engaged in an arduous, but no hopeless struggles and with the inclemency of the weather. He has to build strong houses and procure thick clothes to keep himself warm. To supply fuel for his fires, he must hew down trees and dig coal out of the earth. In the open air, unless he moves quickly, he will suffer pain from the biting wind. Finally, in order to replenish the expenditure of bodily tissue caused by his necessary exertions, he has to procure for himself plenty of nourishing food.

Quite different is the lot of man in the tropics. In the neighbourhood of the equator there is little need of clothes or fire, and it is possible with perfect comfort and no danger to health, to pass the livelong day stretched out on the bare ground beneath the shade of a tree. A very little fruit or vegetable food is required to sustain life under such circumstances, and that little can be obtained without much exertion from the bounteous earth.

We may recognize must the same difference between ourselves at different seasons of the year, as there is between human nature in the tropics and in temperate climes. In hot weather we are generally languid and inclined to take life easily; but when the cold season comes, we find that we are more inclined to vigorous exertion of our minds and bodies.

Climate Conditions: Driving forces for Survival

Presence of obstacle provides a mean to struggle for the best survival. Whereas, absence of any present challenge leaves an individual with no purpose in life. Climate conditions are a challenge for mankind. In temperate regions, the weather conditions are harsh.

These harsh weather conditions demand high energy consumption in order to survive. The cold climate has severe impacts on individual's health. However, in tropics, the weather conditions are less severe. Survival of an individual is possible in less amount of resources. In tropics, the weather conditions have no serious impact on individuals health. These contrasting weather conditions have distinctive impacts on human nature.

The moderate weather has optimistic impacts on human nature. Whereas, the cold weather has resulted in pessimistic outcomes.
