

Deglobalization happens due to ultra nationalism

The first and foremost reason behind deglobalization is the rise of ultra nationalistic sentiments in different countries.

This happens when a nation starts pursuing its own interest as ~~the~~ ^{its} top priority. Whereas, globalisation theory demands equal opportunities to thrive for all the nations. The unequal pace of movement towards success fosters jealousy and malafide intentions among nation states. Thus giving rise to imbalance of power. This upward trend of deglobalization can be exemplified by the rise of Donald Trump in America with an agenda of "Make America Great Again". His slogans are the key components of building nationalism in America. Similarly, other countries follow the suit and come up with nationalistic narrative at the cost of other nations' well-being. Moreover, the recent example of rise of nationalism includes the ideology of Hindutva in India. This embodies the sentiments of Hindus being supreme nation and therefore India always focuses on nationalism in case of India and Pakistan's relationship. These aforementioned illustrations reveal that ultra nationalism is the major cause of deglobalization in twenty-first century.