

Precis Writing

Egyptian Engineering: The Industrial Revolution.

Egyptian engineering was superior to anything before the industrial revolution.

Senuset III, built a long wall to gather the water into Lake Moeris for cultivation and irrigation.

They constructed great canals and obelisks of thousand tons were transported over great distances. ~~It~~

~~we~~ credit. Drawing these huge stones by the slaves was a great effort, according to the author. At that time, machinery was rare because human labour was cheap. In comparison, machinery can perform tasks timely. On lands, goods were transported by human labour or animals. The poor used to walk while the rich rode in sedan-chairs or later in chariots.

Passage Count: 274

Precis Count: 94