

"The Role of International - Aid: Is it Altruism or Imperialism in Disguise for Weakened Nations"

Outline

- I. Introduction
- II. A Broader view of International Aid.
- III. The Role of International aid as an Altruism for weakened nations:
 - a. A catalyst for weakened nations to avoid short-term default.
 - b. It is an opportunity for weakened nation to develop infrastructures.
 - c. By utilizing the aid, weakened nations can improve their security capabilities.
 - d. International aid can help in improving human development index in weakened nations.
 - e. It is the most essential requisite in times of calamitous disasters in weakened nations.
- IV. Some believe that it is a a trap of Imperialism in disguise for weakened Nations:
 - a. Developed nations provide aid to influence the national interest of developing nations.
 - b. The share of developed in quota system of Bretton-Wood institutions influence the sovereignty of weakened nations.

c. By providing aid, developed nations increase their influence in decision-making of weakened nations

d. Providing aid can help developed countries in interfering the internal matters of weak states.

v. However, It is a non-subjective assistance for weak-states toward improving:

a. National interests can be protected by strong successive governments

b. The international humiliation. Institutions are not affiliated to developed countries

c. A strong opposition can never allow the influenced decisions on governments.

d. Weakened countries can accuse the developed state by filing petition in International Court of justice.

vi. Conclusion.

Well organised
Relevant

