Pakistan is looking forward for peace in Afghanistan as it is tremendously important for it. Looking through the historic lens, Pakistan and Afghanistan are intertwined culturally and linguistically. These historic bonds are vital and permanent as both the countries depend on each other for survival. From the very beginning, Pakistan holds for a political solution to the Afghan problem, and even China holds the similar stance. China believes that Afghan conflict can be resolved through peace negotiation under the Afghan leadership. Both Pakistan and China, through a strategic partnership will resolve the Afghan problem in peaceful manner.

Modern Educationist theorists give minimum any weightage to child's personal freedom and very little to enjoying their company as a teacher. Simply, if you like children, they will like you back and listen to you. But, if parents or teachers treat them like commodity or subordinate on which they can exercise power, children will hate them. Very few teachers understand this, that's why they do not have to interfere in child's personal freedom and even if they do, it does not affect child's mental health. Some teachers are exhausted in trying to discipline the naughty children. These overburdened teachers do not develop instinctive liking for them. Therefore, Education should be a part time profession. Indeed, teaching children is a tiresome job which over the long time causes irritation in the behaviour. To what extent a teacher can act? eventually, the irritation is reflected in the behavior. But, a teacher with inherent liking for children do not need rules to discipline children as he/she will act instinctively with love.
