C. Conclusion

Globally, on 8th March, the world celebrates International Women's Day. On this day, women are the center of attention, whether it is on cheesy WhatsApp messages, social media campaigns, or discounts on beauty brands. All wants to make women feel special, but what after the day. For instance, on March 10th, ₹ coupon and discounts are expired, social media is discussing new trends, and women return to their norms: low salaries, unequal opportunities, and the same harassment environment.

On one hand, society gives women special treatment and makes them feel valued, but on the other hand, it denies them equal rights and opportunities. Women remain on the losing side in professional life. Women faces challenges like gender pay gap, low representation in workplaces, and transportation challenges. Similarly, old cultural norms acts as a barrier in women's professional life. Moreover, the digital gap, lack of education, and underrepresentation in the STEM fields undermine the women's role in professional life. Furthermore, women from marginalized groups face discrimination at workplaces. Likewise, women have to take care of both house and office, this double responsibilities often impact their careers. Women also faces challenges like early marriages and maternity issues which make profound effects on their professional life.

In the same manner, the advent of technology also affects their professional life by cyber-bullying on social media. Despite all the efforts towards gender equality, persistent challenges such as gender pay gap, low representation, old cultural norms, digital gap and issues in transportation continue to disadvantage women in professional spheres.
