

The anxieties of human beings while dealing with mysteries of life compelled them to communicate with the divine forces whose directions served as guiding principles for them. During ancient Greece, these directions were conveyed in the form of oracles practised by Sooth-Sayers. They practised oracles by interpreting various gestures of nature. Besides, interpretation of dreams and palmistry were also common. But, on a number of occasions, Gods communicated instructions to the followers through an intermediate. Greek's curiosity to predict about future made them practise oracles. Each oracle was well-organised and associated with a specific god. Apollo conveyed the decisions given by Zeus. However, the oldest ones worked with the assistance of Zeus.
