

Q. Compare and contrast the different political philosophies of Hobbes and Locke. How are these [odd] philosophies implemented in present day political systems and policy making?

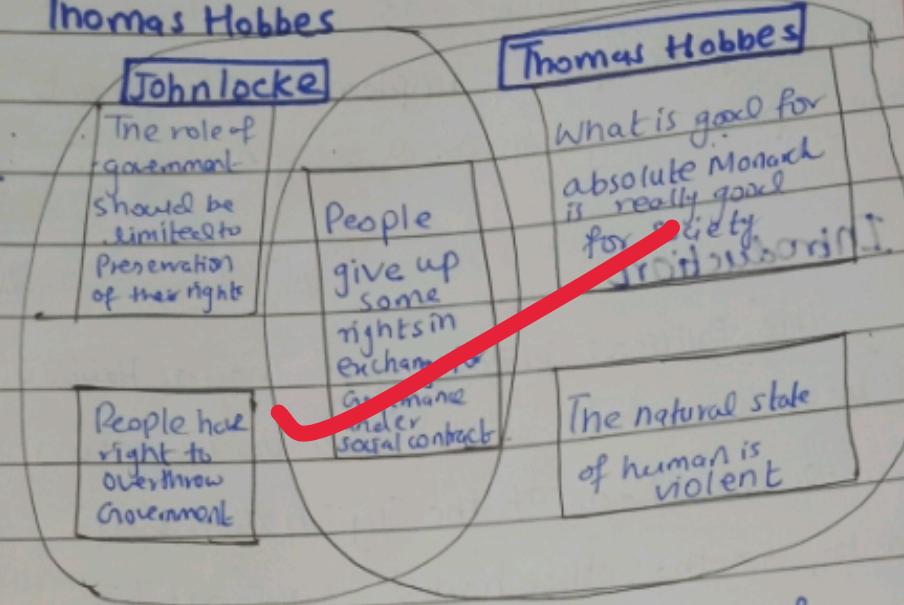

Introduction

The Political philosophy of Thomas Hobbes is best seen in his work Leviathan, written amidst the chaos of the English Civil War. Locke, on the other hand, laid out his political philosophy in his Two Treatises on Government, published in 1689, just after the Glorious Revolution, but written a few years earlier. Both the philosophers argue that Government is based on Social contract in which the people, desiring security for their property and their persons give up some of their liberties in return for the protection afforded by Government.

There are differences in their theories of Social contract including Individual rights, role of Government and State of Nature.

Both theories look toward toward the security of an individual as well as that of the state.

2) Comparison of John Locke and Thomas Hobbes

→ The similarity in the teachings of Thomas Hobbes and J. Locke

Thomas Hobbes and J. Locke were the famous philosophers of the theory of social contract. According to this theory, before the emergence of state, people were in the natural state. They considered individuals as an essential element and interpreted the state as a result of the social contract between the individuals, concluded to stop the natural state. Their theory of social contract is theory of nature of the state, not the theory of origin of state. T. Hobbes and J. Locke

1- Views on Human Nature

John Locke and Thomas Hobbes have different views on human nature.

1(a) Locke's Perspective on Human Nature

According to Locke, humans are born as blank slates, with no inherent knowledge or instincts. He believed that our experiences shape our understanding of the world, and that our ideas come from our senses. Locke's optimistic and liberal outlook emphasized individual freedom and the potential for a good society to produce good people. It is important to note that Locke rejects the idea that humans are limited by their nature.

1(b) Hobbes Perspective on Human Nature

Thomas Hobbes held a contrasting view on human nature. Unlike Locke, Hobbes believed that human nature is driven by self-interest and competition. Hobbes saw human beings as inherently selfish and prone to violence. Hobbes' cynical view led him to advocate for a strict monarchy, believing that a powerful ruler was

2) Theory of Government

a) Locke's theory of Government:

Locke's theory of government, also known as liberalism, is based on the idea that humans are born as blank slates and acquire knowledge through experience. According to Locke, individuals have certain fundamental rights, including life, liberty and property. According to Locke, individuals have certain fundamental rights, including life, liberty and property. These rights are inherent and cannot be taken away by governing authority.

2b) Hobbes theory of Government

Hobbes theory of Government, also known as "authoritarianism" presents a starkly different view of human nature and role of government. He argues that the natural state of humanity is "war of all against all".

The only way to protect this chaotic state of affairs is through a powerful and absolute monarchy. Hobbes argues that by surrendering ruler with total control

3. Implication of Locke's philosophy:

John Locke laid the groundwork for liberal political thought, with its emphasis on individual rights and representative governments. Locke's philosophy has had a profound impact on modern democratic societies, including constitutional frameworks, separation of powers, and the protection of individual rights.

3a) Countries operate on principles align with John Locke's philosophy:

The United States political system, with its representative democracy and respect for individual liberties, reflects Locke's emphasis on consent of the governed and limited government. As his birthplace, the United Kingdom has historically been influenced by his ideas. Australia's legal system and political institutions emphasize democratic principles, including free and fair elections, rule of law. These countries demonstrate how elements of Locke's philosophy are reflected in their political systems. While no country perfectly embodies Locke's ideas, they serve as examples of nations that have incorporated his principles into their governance structures.

4) Hobbes implication of philosophy

His work, particularly outlined in "Leviathan" argues for an absolute sovereign with extensive powers to keep society in check. While modern democracies may not adopt Hobbes' absolute monarchy, his ideas of importance of a centralized authority and the need for social order have influenced various political systems.

4a) Countries adhere to ideas of Hobbes:-

The totalitarian regime in North Korea, under the leadership of Kim dynasty, exercises strict control over all aspects of society.

While China has undergone significant economic reforms and has elements of state-led capitalism, the CCP maintains tight control over political power. Under the leadership of Putin, Russia under the leadership has seen a consolidation of powers in hands of President and the ruling elite. These examples illustrate how authoritarian regimes exhibit

5 Conclusion:

In a nutshell, both Locke and Hobbes explored the origins and nature of Government, they had different views on human nature, the social contract, the role of government and natural rights.

Hobbes advocated for a strong, centralized government to maintain order while

Locke argued for a limited government to protect individual rights. Understanding their divergent theories is crucial for examining the foundations of modern political thought. However, it is essential to recognize that no country strictly adheres to the political philosophy of any single thinker, and political systems often incorporate a mix of various ideologies and principles.

D.B

Both theories support government as a way of individual protection.
