

Precis

Examination 1976

Fewer Pleasant Hours of Working

The current industrial establishment has been the result of government regulations, advance technology and intervention of labor unions. Technological improvement increased production but to make it more effectively, needed more profits. Like, it is permitted to abolishment of dangerous labor conditions. The test was not what was permitted but what was harmful. The increased pleasure is not depreciable but we risks man should not work hard. It is important that workers get agreeable working conditions. Moreover, it is common in industries that most difficult work have many workers. The solution is to to supply more workers at basic tasks. It is not specifically argued that shock work is more productive than more. Rather fewer pleasant hours are more preferred to more.

Total words:

words in Passage : 395

words in Precis : 130