idea is known as "Democratic Peace Theory". The theory suggests that democracies share common values and institutions, such as respect for human rights, freedom of speech, and the rule of law, which facilitate cooperation and peaceful resolution of disputes. As a result, democracies are more likely to form alliances and engage in cooperative initiatives.

2. INTERDEPENDENCE AND GLOBALISATION:

- Liberalism highlights the growing interdependence among states due to globalization. As economies become more integrated, countries depend on each other for trade, investment, and technology exchange.

This interdependence creates incentives for states to cooperate and resolve disputes peacefully, as conflicts can negatively impact their economies and overall well-being.
