Subject: Role of Electronic Media in Creating Awareness

Respected Sir,

I am writing this letter to acknowledge the role of electronic media in creating awareness about the social and moral values in our society. In a society like Pakistan where literacy rate is inarguably very low and people are either ill informed or under informed about the serious issues of morality and society, your newspaper is playing a significant role in creating awareness regarding issues of political polarization, gender inequality, intolerance, and environmental degradation.

The ^{recent} campaign for creating awareness regarding child labour by your newspaper is highly commendable. The way you people are taking the help of renowned celebrities to ask people to participate in the general elections of Pakistan, played a vital role in strengthening the democratic process of the country.

Moreover, your electronic newspaper services has played a significant role in reducing the paper consumption which will eventually be ~~beneficial~~ ^{beneficial} in protecting the environment from the wrath of global warming.

Our beloved country is in a serious need of such positive role of electronic media to prevent moral and social decline.

I hope that your newspaper will continue to launch more campaigns for ^{promoting} social and moral values in our society.

Thank you for all the services.

Make a précis of the following passage and suggest a suitable title.

John Lock reflects the new situation in England more than ever when he goes on to argue that the reason men come together to live in society, with laws, is for the preservation of their property. Since men are driven into society, it follows that the power of that society 'can never be suffered to extend further than the common good'. And this common good can only be determined by standing laws, statutes, that all are aware of and agree to, and not by extemporary degrees of, say, an absolute sovereign. Moreover, these laws must be administered 'by indifferent and upright judges'. Only in this way can the people (and rulers) know where they are. In an important amendment to the idea of absolute monarchy, Lock said that the king can never suspend the law. Finally Lock gave voice to the main anxiety of the rising commercial classes in England (a fear of something which they saw happening in France, in state intervention in trade), that no power can take from a man his property without his consent. 'A soldier may be commanded by a superior in all things, save the disposal of his property'. In the same way a man has property in his own person, meaning that a man's labor is his property too. The most important consequence of this, Lock says is that people can be taxed only with their consent. (We recognize this now in the doctrine 'No taxation without representation'.)

John Locke and the Concept of Collective Good

John Locke believed that people forms a law abiding society to protect their property. So, the power of society must not outrun the collective good of that society. It is decided through laws made from popular sovereignty instead of absolute sovereignty of a monarch. Independent and fair judiciary must protect these laws. Hence, possession of man's property and taxation must not ^{be} imposed without a man's consent which is achieved through power of representation.
