

PRÉCIS
Central Superior Services Examination (CSS) 2010

Jewously

Passage.

Of all the characteristics of ordinary human nature envy is the most unfortunate; not only does the envious person wish to inflict misfortune and do so whenever he can with impunity, but he is also himself rendered unhappy by envy. Instead of deriving pleasure from what he has, he derives pain from what others have. If he can, he deprives others of their advantages, which to him is as desirable as it would be to secure the same advantages himself. If this passion is allowed to run riot it becomes fatal to all excellence, and even the most useful exercise of exceptional skill. Why should a medical man go to see his patients in a car when the labourer has to walk to his work? Why should the scientific investigator be allowed to spend his time in a warm room when others have to face the inclemency of the elements? why should a man who possesses some rare talent of great importance to the world be saved from the drudgery of his own housework? To such questions envy finds no answer. Fortunately, however, there is in human nature a compensating passion, namely that of admiration. Whosoever wishes to increase human happiness must wish to increase admiration and to diminish envy. What cure is there for envy? For the saint there is the cure of selflessness, though even in the case of saints' envy of other saints is by no means impossible. But, leaving saints out of account, the only cure of envy in the case of ordinary men and women is happiness, and the difficulty is that envy is itself a terrible obstacle to happiness. But the envious man may say: 'what is the good of telling me that the cure of envy is happiness? I cannot find happiness while i continue to feel envy, and you tell me that i cannot cease to be envious until i find happiness.' but real life is never so logical as this. Merely to realize the cause of one's own envious feeling is to take a long step towards curing them.

Final Draft

The Envious Nature of Humans

Envy ~~Jealousy~~ is an unlucky feature of the human nature. This attracts misfortune and unhappiness to the envious men. The envious men always get pain from ^{what} others have rather than deriving happiness from ^{their} own resources. A Jealous man always ^{desires} desire to deprive others of their benefits. This act is ~~for envious men~~ sporn to secure same benefits for themselves. Moreover, there is also a positive feature in human nature known as admiration. This helps humans to increase happiness and reduce envy. ^{No space in furthermore} Further more, cure for envy is happiness. men may face hurdle of envy to achieve happiness, ^{however,} ~~although~~ taking long steps to cure the envy can be ~~achieved~~.

(Total words in Precis 105)