Educationists Approach of Treating Children

OR

An Effective Way of Nurturing Children

Some educationists, according to the writer, do not try to interact with children effectively. If they possess affinity for children like they do for pets, children will behave optimistically. Children should be loved without any special benefit. A few teachers possess this quality.

Contrarily, some overworked teachers do not have this instinct; they are merely duty bound. Their interaction with children should not exceed two hours daily. The self control based on rules can never generate affable feelings. It is a wrong approach to treat children lead by rules, as rules cannot substitute love.
