

United Nations

United Nations is an international organization. It was formed in 1945 after World War-II. The reason to form UN was the failure of League of Nations because League of Nations was not able to stop the World War-II and it caused a lot of disturbance and human loss. So, United Nations was established and the purpose of establishment was to control the greatest wars and maintain peace in the world. United Nations consists of 193 members. All the members are bound to follow the UN Charter, principles and rules of United Nations. This organization consists of six organs which are named as: Economic and Social Council, The Trusteeship Council, International Court of Justice, The Secretariate, General Assembly and Security Council. Each body does different functions. For example, Security Council gives recommendations for conflict resolution and send peace-keeping missions into the conflict zones. General Assembly is the biggest organ of the United Nations. Every member country has one seat in General Assembly session. United Nations is a useful and advantageous organization because it keeps peace and harmony throughout the world. It is responsibility of every member state to follow the UN Charter so that United Nations will become a purposeful organization in the future.
