

Freedom in Education comprises of three schools of thought. One says children should be completely free, another says they should follow rules/authority and third says they should be always free to become good. The third school of thought assumes that freedom leads to moral perfection, but it seems unrealistic, because children cannot learn everything at their own. Therefore, education needs balance in freedom, guidance, teaching skills and in values to survive.

Titles.

- = Education needs balance to survive.
- = The importance of balance in education
- = Education must equip with mental and moral ingredients to survive.