With the rise of global warming, accelerating climate action can be a panacea to attain healthy environment. Currently, Pakistan has been labelling as the 8th most vulnerable country by the report of OEDC. To consider climate action in national policy is not only helpful to achieve sustainable economy but also to enhance the well-being of the citizens. For this, Pakistan needs to rethink its climate policy goals. Additionally, it must follow the protocols of Paris climate agreement (2015) in letter and spirit. Besides the national policy, Pakistan also needs to increase incentives for climate action in its annual budgeting session. Thus, climate action has been a clarion call to global for achieving a sustainable and healthy environment.
