

Passage 1 - Unsinkable Ship

Naval architects never claim that a ship is unsinkable, but the sinking of the passenger-and-car ferry Estonia in the Baltic surely should have never have happened. It was well designed and carefully maintained. It carried the proper number of lifeboats. It had been thoroughly inspected the day of its fatal voyage. Yet hours later, the Estonia rolled over and sank in a cold, stormy night. It went down so quickly that most of those on board, caught in their dark, flooding cabins, had no chance to save themselves: Of those who managed to scramble overboard, only 139 survived. The rest died of hypothermia before the rescuers could pluck them from the cold sea. The final death toll amounted to 912 souls. However, there were an unpleasant number of questions about why the Estonia sank and why so many survivors were men in the prime of life, while most of the dead were women, children and the elderly.

Mystery of Estonia

According to author, Estonia, a passenger-and-car ferry, never intended to sink in Baltic. It was well checked the day before the tragedy. Unfortunately, the ferry sunk, and it was so ephemeral that they had no chance to save themselves. There were less toll of men who lost their life compared to children and women. This has raised numerous questions about it.
