

City Parks: Platform for Communal Harmony and Environmental Security

In the cities, urban green spaces are the source of wildlife diversity, peace and freedom from the noises. They maintain equilibrium between increasing urbanization and ecological protection. Additionally they serve as a platform for communal harmony through familial gatherings, cultural, artistic and sports activities, and individuals' direct access to the nature. Besides, they protect urban environment from aerial pollution and promote mental health by availing room for self reflection and meditation. But it has become challenge to protect them in the face urbanization. However, their protection is necessary for sustainable urbanization, human and environmental health. Resultantly, their protection has become mutual responsibility for promotion of longlasting and peaceful coexistence between human development and the environment.
